is the representative of this new phase. He contends that, by the Kansas Act, Congress is bound not to interfere with any territorial legislation in reference to slavery; he contends that even a violation of the Kansas Act by the Territorial Legislature cannot be noticed or supervised by Congress; he contends that it was agreed between North and South that all such questions should be referred to the decision of the Supreme Court; he contends that the Territorial Legislature, while it has no power to exclude slavery by direct legislation, yet it has the power, incidentally and by its power of taxation, to render slavery so unprofitable, by burthensome taxes, that it can-

its power of taxation, to render slavery so unprofitable, by burthensome taxes, that it cannot exist in the Territory; he contends further, that it can dissiminate against slavery, by refusing to pass here for the punishment of those aggressing upon it, either by theft or by harboring or inducing slaves to runaway; it is contended that those doctrines, as against the Government are supported by Kansas Act; and as against the National Democracy, that they can be maintained under the just interpretation of the Gneimnati Platform. Under the leadership of such a man as Mr. Douglas, they present issues more dangerous to the South than ever were the issues of the Wilmot Proviso or squatter sovereignty.

It is unnecessary for me to add that, in my opinion, this doctrine of Mr. Douglas is alike unconstitutional, insidious and baneful to the true policy of the South. I would that the abilities of such a man were arrayed on the counties of such a man were arrayed on the abilities of such a man were allowed the abilities of such a man and the contains the such and the can unconstitutional, insidious and baneful to the true policy of the South. I would that the implication; and bence, when two statutes are abilities of such a man were arrayed on the side of the principles of justice and the Constitution; but as they are not, he must be metitality, at least of possible, that the later shall not be a repeal of the former by implication.

Same—Construction of general words in a statute should never be justiced to the construction and activation; and activation is the treatment of general words in a statute should never be justiced to the construction of construction construction of the various of the common agent of the fund of the f

Kansas. But the legislative power given to the Territory by that act is expressly declared to be such as is consistent with the Constitution of the United States. It being the duty of Congress to make proper legislation for the Territory, if Congress for the sake of convenience confers its own power upon the Territorial Legislature, unless there is something in the act negativing the proposition, it is clearly the duty of Congress to see to it that its agent the Territorial Legislature, passes no act inconsistent with the Federal Constitution—the erritorial Legislature, passes no act in-tent with the Federal Constitution—the nitation of its own power. But e shown in the Kansas Act which ives that plain proposition, when Con-declared that it was not its intention to the Supreme Court of the United States is the only tribunal that can pass in Judgement upon such acts. The only clause in the Kandaras at the said sum not recognized by the Auditor of the Territory to the Supreme Court of the United States. This chaose was simply designed to afford an adequate remedy to parties to suits in the various courts. A decision upon such appeal is only binding upon the parties to the appeal is only binding upon the parties of the Federal Government. If the Territorial Legislature chooses to disregard the opinions expressed by the Supreme Court, what power is there that can force an observance of such decisions upon the part of the Legislature. The Supreme Court within the filter of the federal country and to contend that Congress has abandonment of power cannot be shown to have been made by the Kanasa act. The South never has asked that Congress should legislate slavery into, or, in other words, should legislate slavery into, or, in other words, should legislate slavery into, or, in other words, as a shandonment of power cannot be shown to have been made by the Kanasa act. The South never has asked that Congre

The South never has asked that Congress should legislate slavery into, or, inother words, create it in a Territory. (Applause.) The declaration, therefore, in that act, that Congress had no such design, had no foundation in any fact showing such a wish upon the part of the South, but was only designed to meet the accusation made by the North, that by that act Congress— its basis is a much higher law—The law to protect slavery from felonious aggression, is not the law to establish slavery. Slavery can exist as a fact even without necessary laws to preserve it from aggression, but to exist in its perfection, to claim the full rights to which it is entitled, and which has been granted to every other species of property. Therefore, in a Territorial Government, there is no right under the Federal Constitution in such a government to discriminate against clavery. If it pass any law to protect any species of property, slavery has a right to the breefit of such a law; refusing it such equal benefit is alike unconstitutional and unjust.

The South very—Africans not citizens of African descent, by the Common consent of civilized nations, at the time of the Declaration of Independence, and the adoption of the constitution of the United States, were doomed to slavery as an inferior class; possessing no rights which the white race were bound to recognize; and they were not regarded as a part of the people, who united in the declaration or in framing the constitution; and they are not citizens of the United States. Scott vs. Sand-ford, 19 How.

2. International law—what it is.—The law of nations is a system of rules, which has been granted to every other species of property. Therefore, in a Territorial Government, there is no right under the Federal Constitution in such a government to discriminate against clavery. If it pass any law to protect any species of property, slavery has a right to the breefit of such a law; refusing it such equal benefit is alike unconstitutional and unjust.

for a slave code. She does demand, she will insist upon it, she will have it, an equal protection to slavery with that given to all other species of property. If she cannot get that protection in the Union she will have it out of it. (Applaus.) But it is said by some here at the South, that this is but contending for an abstraction. It may be so. When our Constitutions, State and Federal, were framed, every right secured, every wrong prohibited, was but an abstraction. But, severtheless, how important it was that these great abstract questions should be wisely and properly settled. All rules for the future conduct and guidance, whether of government or individuals, are but abstractions, which, in the course of events, become practical. It is no good reason, when wrong rules and principles for the guidance of excession are asserted by season, when weap rules and principles for the guidance of government are asserted by those having the power to maintain them, that the party against whom they are asserted should fall to meet these assertions of wrong, but should quietly waive a decision upon them until the hour for their practical assertion arrives. The time to meet danger is when it presents itself, the place to meet it is at the threshold. This government is largely influenced by public opinion, and to lay silently by and permit public opinion, and to lay silently by and permit public opinion to be formed against us upon any question, however abstract at present is the height of political folly and weakness.

If the party who asserts that these principles asserted by Mr. Douglas are but abstractions, mean that they will never come into practical operation, they in fact, thereby significantly assert that the South has not vitality and power enough ever again to make it a practical question whother a slave State can be formed of the public domain. If this doctrine of Mr. Douglas is to become the settled policy of this country, its practical operation will be that every new State admitted into the Union will be a free State, and that the South is practically denied any expansion of her institution. It will not do to say in reply to this, that it is the misfortune of the South, if she cannot keep up with the North in settling the territories. It is not the misfortune of the South could have kept equal position, with the North in settling our public domain. In the North in settling our public domain

Congress disclaimed in the Kansas act any design to legislate slavery into or out of the Perritory. It conferred upon the Territorial i egislature, in general torms, all legislative of the oppressed in Europe to pay for the Power is consistent with the Constitution of the Curitory. It conferred upon the Constitution of the Curitory. It conferred upon the Constitution of the Interfere with the Constitution of the Curitory. It conferred upon the Constitution of the Curitory in the South by the act of our Government; while during the half century that has since elapsed, the stream of European labor has constantly flowed into North, sometimes reaching as manch as a half million a year. It is this advantage, in the Territories, has been before the Supreme Court, and in the Dred Scott decision, those questions have been decided in favor of the Vews contended for the South. Wilmof Provisoism and squatter sovereignty have been decided to be unconstitutional; but the spread of anti-slavery yields not to political or judges of the South. The Dred Scott decision is declared by them, as to territorial guestions declared by them, as to territorial disclations and more dangerous phase than it has heretofore assumed. Mr. Douglas bits in the Proposents itself to-day in antagonism to the South in a new and more dangerous phase than it has heretofore assumed. Mr. Douglas bits in the representative of this new phase.
